

LILLI JOHNSON VITALE

Dear Friend,

There are many things I can share with you about my husband, Nino.

I can tell you what a wonderful husband he is. We've been married almost 16 years now, and Nino has become a leader in the fight to preserve the sanctity of marriage.

I can tell you what a devoted and loving father Nino is to our five sons. We have also been a foster family and were blessed to welcome four different foster children into our home over the years. Each touched our lives in a special way and taught us a little something more about ourselves, our blessings, and the importance of family.

What I really want to share with you is Nino's commitment to our families- not just ours, but every family. I know without a doubt that no one will work harder in Columbus than Nino to make our families stronger.

Nino has never shied away from the tough jobs or the tough decisions, and there are many of those to be made in Ohio today. Nino has worked in a factory, in heavy highway construction, and as a hod carrier for brick layers.

Today, Nino helps manage our family business, building on his 20 years of firsthand experience in the private sector, creating jobs, and standing up for what's right for the business and its employees. That's why our business is suing to stop Obama's health insurance mandate, standing up to Washington directly and taking on Obamacare.

Nino doesn't just talk about creating jobs - he's done it. Nino will use his experience to get government out of the way of job creators and let the private sector grow and succeed. Government shouldn't be picking winners and losers, and Nino will make sure they don't.

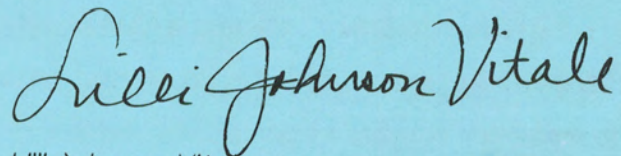

Nino will work to create the good jobs our families need today and the better opportunities our children will need tomorrow.

Nino doesn't just talk about his values, he lives them. For over 8 years, Nino has served in the leadership of Champaign County Right to Life, leading the fight to protect the rights of the unborn. Nino will carry that fight to Columbus, working day in and day out to uphold our family values, protect life, and strengthen our families.

It's what Nino cares about most. It's what I love most about him.

I hope you will join me in supporting Nino Vitale for State Representative on Tuesday, May 6th.

Sincerely,
